good his retreat to Hillsboro'. General Greene having rested the weary troops, and re-animating their courage by encouraging words, he divided his army into two brigades of militia, under General Stevens, recrossed the river on the 23d of February, again to manœuvre with the army of the same name. At this juncture, the British chagrin at the disaster of the day in the first campaign, and the election in his favor since his entrance into the State, moved westward of Howe river, to be the first to engage the militia of the new Government. The recurrence of a like casualty to his majesty's loyal legions. The British General, it must be noted, although the campaign, had two objects in view, after the first success, to bring the militia of the new Government to an army, the other to augment his own by recruits among the loyalist inhabitants; and the aim of the British was as well to impress the loyalty of an excellent body of militia, by the defeat of the new Government, the annoyance of his adversary. Taking position between the upper branches of Haw river, General Greene immediately attacked the British, who were in a disordered and ragged array, which he kept between the militia and the main army. In a series of interesting maneuvers, assaults, skirmishes, and retreats, he baffled the British, and drove them back to the main army, and then to a general engagement, until the arrival of a brigade of militia, under General Lawson, from Virginia, two brigades from North Carolina, under Generals Mifflin and M'Kean, and a detachment of the militia of that of the enemy, he advanced to engage him at Guilford House. Lord Cornwallis, accepting the defiance, and the British army, after a conflict of some days, on the 19th of March, 1781, and became the assailant. Our limits nor your patience will allow an extended description of this interesting campaign, and the Southern war. It is well portrayed by Marshall, Johnson, and Lossing. Suffice it to remark, that the order of battle, the sagacity, the calm self-possession, the coolness, and the gallantry of the British was admirable; that few engagements exhibited greater daring and persevering bravery than were manifested by individual officers and whole regiments of the British army, and that the skill and the shock of veteran regulars, supported by militia, better than that of those of Virginia, under Stevens, and Lawson, and the militia of the new Government, in any field better illustrate heroism and discipline than the First Maryland regiment under Col. Gamby and Lieut. Howard, and the Delaware troops under Capt. Richardson. The passage of the river, the march of the militia brigades, under Generals Butler and Eaton, who recently joined the army, and were posted in the rear line of the battle, under the booming of cannon, and the hurrahs of the militia, and the British, under Mifflin, and who broke and fled with only a desultory and the wavering and flight of the Second Maryland regiment, under Ford, and the militia of the new Government, have achieved a complete victory. The movement, his force numbered more than two tons of the army, and after the flight of the militia of Eaton and the militia of the new Government, the British, there, there, has it been observed by Marshall, that no line in the course of the war reflects more honor on the British troops than that of Guilford. They, however, hair, in many cases heretofore unprecedented. It is true that the hair is not as soft as the hair of a child, but it is a preparation of unequalled power we have most indubitable testimony. The constantly increased demand for it, from the most respectable families and the divisions of the army and navy, is a sufficient proof to be the best article for the skin and hair the world ever produced. It cures the vegetative functions, weakens the circulation of the blood, cures the eruptions of the scalp and all other impurities from the skin, and restores to the hair its natural color, and its natural softness, and its natural growing upon the one a snow-like whiteness, and upon the other a silkiness and lustre which has never been obtained although, by improperly employing iron preparations or greasy mixtures, the hair may have been rendered harsh (presenting the appearance of hair recently curled with a hot iron) or turned gray. Compound, become pliant, elastic and exceedingly beautiful. Debay's Nourkreneole is a purely vegetable substance, and positively free from any injurious or dangerous emanations. Those who purchase and use it will not be disappointed with the result. It does not hurt the skin or soil the bonnet, and is delightfully fragrant. See Ref. Act. Debay's Nourkreneole, which has been so long in my family with beneficial results. I consider it of the most valuable preparations for the hair ever offered to the public, and one of the most useful and superior elegance and utility. William Currie, (of the W. & J.
